A life-size stainless steel sculpture of a Bhadole has been installed in Margao as a reminder of the town’s traditional women cooks who were the epitome of sincerity, honesty and hard work.

Sculptor Subodh Kerkar has taken two years to fashion the sculpture, which was installed by the Margao Municipal Corporation to oppose a proposed flyover that went across the traffic circle opposite Goan Velho’s Kinar.

Mr. Kerkar said, “Bhadoles are believed to be country’s only women cooks. To earn a living they walked long distances carrying heavy loads on their heads. Their origin dates back to the 16th century Portuguese era and they are well known for their culinary ability. Shopkeepers in Margao revered them with the responsibility of guarding over their shops while they took an afternoon nap. There were 100-old Bhadole till a next generation doesn’t want to take up the profession.”

Dutta Naik, a Sabrana Akhada awardee, is the man behind the installation. He is the managing director of Commonwealth Developers Pvt. Ltd., which funded the sculpture as a part of its Corporate Social Responsibility initiative. Mr. Kerkar said Mr. Naik had requested him to make a sculpture to pay tribute to the Bhadoles six months ago. He then researched on the profession for a month and found that only around seven Bhadoles still existed in Margao. Mr. Naik said, “The sculpture has been installed as a reminder that Bhadoles existed in Margao and served, the social needs of the community. In European countries, sculptures of common people instead of national and historical icons have become a part of street furniture and attract tourists.”

The Bhadole was identified as a fast disappearing traditional Goa occupation in a report submitted by the Task Force Committee on November 30, 2010. The panel was formed to frame a scheme to protect and support traditional occupations in the State. The panel chaired by Dr. Nand Kumar M. Kamat, Assistant Professor of Goa University and former member of the Goa State Planning Board, recommended that financial assistance be provided to the last practitioners of such dying trades.

Mr. Kamat said, “How can Handlo [the work] be glorified in this age of automation? The scheme was an attempt to reverse that trend. The aim was to attract a new generation to the work and inspire the next generation to take up the profession.”

Brics of the Wall

How India and China repair their rifts at the summit will determine the future of Brics itself

By MABIN BANERJEE

The return of the Delhi-South relationship and the para- dox of Beijing's growing isolation from the West, why Indian cities are unable to improve their road networks, and the need for India to improve its energy infrastructure.

India's economic assistance is here: it is not the perfect solution, but it could be a stepping stone to a more lasting and effective approach.

The road ahead

India and China are likely to come from China's plan to create a new Brics group, foreign minister Wang Yi's plan to include China's two biggest economies.

The suggestion of including India is something that has landed on China's desk and won't pass quite yet, but it would make a partial move towards the Chinese interest in institutionalising a Brics-meets-two.

Meanwhile Russia, which was previously under pressure to backtrack, has moved closer to China and has been pressuring the Brics countries to reform and diversify its energy sector.

Managing embankments

Involving the communities would help minimise the misery in flood-prone areas

Rainbow of possibilities

The privacy judgment can be used to push for queer rights in spaces beyond the Grabhernalin gender identity crisis and the militancy that was stifled by the 1997 judgment. The Petition Court offers a far more principled constitutional protection that could be used to challenge this kind of argument.

This attestation of privacy as part of personal dignity allows one to use the law against the usual argument we hear from the right, that is, that queerness is flawed by virtue of whatever the right says.

Our study of over 100 villages in the floodplains of the basement of the Ganges shows that the floodplains are exposed to diverse flood risks and the strategies that are in place vary considerably. We see that a successful outcome for these communities is not possible without a comprehensive rethinking of flood management strategies in the region. The courts have a constitutional responsibility to think of justice for queer lovers and the Petition Court would be the answer to the question of privacy and the end result of the judgment.

There are several ways in which it has been possible to protect villages located outside the floodplains. This has been done by communities having a role in the decision-making process. Communities have been able to protect villages located outside them from floods. Despite this, very little has been done to develop flood management strategies that can help communities cope with flood risks. Some communities have been more successful in flood protection than others. The causes of this success and failure can be attributed to the role played by communities in the decision-making process.

Economic freedom has a substantial positive impact on building up human capital

Government is an extremely useful tool for those who are interested in controlling the economy. Government can do a lot of good for society. However, it is also true that governments have a tendency to interfere with personal decisions that people make. The court offers us a way to think of justice for queer lovers and the Petition Court would be the answer to the question of privacy and the end result of the judgment.

Nascom, States mull data science centres

Plans include a centre of excellence for cybersecurity

LAE BHASKAR

The National Association of Software and Services Companies (Nasscom), in conjunction with state governments, plans to set up two centres of excellence in data sciences and another one for cyber security soon, K.S. Vishwanathan, vice-president, Industry Initiatives, announced on Wednesday.

"Along with the government of Karnataka and government of Telangana, we will be announcing two centres of excellence in data sciences," Mr. Vishwanathan said. "The process of evaluating these centres is going on in both the states. Both are supported by the Ministry of Electronics and Information Technology.

The Centre of Excellence for the states of Karnataka will be expanded to three other centres. The location will be decided by the Government. Another Centre of Excellence will get established in Karnataka on cybersecurity," he said. "We are also opening a centre in Gannagown soon.

The Centre of Excellence for Telangana was started in 2011 to build up an ecosystem in the state. We have multiple centres such as startups, enterprises, universities, capital and academia. It is supported by the federal and state governments.

"The main objective of the centres is to help Indian startups leverage latest technologies and mark-new products," Mr. Vishwanathan said.

Mr. Vishwanathan said, "U.S. is starting to count. About 27% of startups in Bangalore and about 24% in the northern and western regions.

In the country there are about 60,000 startups. Within a span of five years, we have emerged among the top three. We are close to number two with U.K. This year we should possibly overtake U.K."

According to Nasscom, 25% of the startups are in Greater Mumbai, about 34% in Northern region (NCB) and Western region (Shamlal, Panip).

"The balance is scattered," he said. "In the initial phase, 50% of the startups were in the business-to-business and 10% to business-to-business category. In B2C, a bulk of them were in the e-commerce segment, mobility and commerce, and Internet of Things, according to Nasscom.

"The process has changed. Sixty percent is in B2B and 40% in B2C. B2B is also supported by technologies like IoT, AI, enterprise-ready startups and blockchain," he said.

Impacted 3,000

India has 6,000 startups and close to 100 accelerators. We have corporate, private and government accelerators put together have registered a 25% year-on-year growth last year and Nasscom expects the growth rate to be maintained this fiscal year too.

NADA's new initiative

The National Anti-Doping Agency (NADA) has announced a de-narcotic initiative to curb the menace of substance abuse in Indian sports. This initiative comes in the wake of growing concerns over the use of performance-enhancing drugs and their adverse effects on athletes.

The memorandum of understanding (MoU) was signed in the presence of NADA's Additional Director General S.N. Agarwal and R. Senthil Kumar, Vice-President of the Indian Olympic Association (IOA).

Dr. NADA said that the initiative is a step towards creating a drugs-free environment in sports. He emphasized that the use of drugs is not only harmful to the athlete's health but also to the future generation.

The MoU aims to create awareness among athletes, coaches, and officials about the harmful effects of drug abuse. It also includes the establishment of a drug-free zone in sports facilities, the provision of training and seminars on drug-free sports, and the implementation of a strict drug-testing policy.

The Indian Olympic Association (IOA) has also signed the MoU, expressing its commitment to support the initiative. The IOA has already taken several steps to ensure drug-free sports, including the establishment of a drug-testing center.

The new initiative is expected to be implemented in all sports federations and associations in India. The first phase of the initiative will focus on creating awareness among athletes, coaches, and officials. In the subsequent phases, the initiative will include the provision of training and seminars, the implementation of a strict drug-testing policy, and the establishment of a drug-free zone in sports facilities.

Tennis fans. The 19-year-old Tsitsipas, right, gave ample display of his talent as he took five-time champion Roger Federer to five sets on Tuesday. "I'm happy. I'm happy," Federer said after the match. "In the world of sport, you have to fight for it. You need to give your best every time."

Federer was pushed to five sets in the opening round of the US Open for the third time in four years by Tsitipas, the 19-year-old Greek making his main-draw appearance at the US Open, championing his career. The second set was lost on a tiebreak, 7-6, 6-2, 6-4, on Friday. Federer was expected to advance in advance.

However, backed by a massive home crowd, teenager Tsitsipas had ideas and came close to producing one of the biggest upsets of the event.

"That pressure is not fun," Federer said after the match. "But it's what you have to go through."

"I was nervous in the beginning from my back slice from a couple weeks ago," Tsitsipas said after the match. "I think this is going to give me a lot of confidence. It's important to go through all of these emotional roller coasters."

U.S. approves gene therapy for cancer

The United States approved the first gene therapy in the nation on Wednesday — a treatment that uses a patient's own immune cells to fight childhood leukaemia. The treatment is made by Novartis and is called Kymriah (tisagenlecleucel).

This type of immunotherapy, known as a CAR-T cell therapy, was known by the term CTL-401 until now. It was approved by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration for children and young adults with a common form of blood cancer known as acute lymphoblastic leukaemia.

The FDA described the approval as "a historic action" that would usher "in a new approach to the treatment of cancer and other serious and life-threatening diseases," said a statement.

Studies have shown that 83% of patients responded to the treatment, achieving remission within three months.

The treatment is not a pill or a form of chemotherapy. It uses a patient's own immune cells, called T-cells, along with white blood cells.

These cells are removed from a patient, sent to a lab to be modified with genetic material that makes them seek out and attack cancer cells, then returned to the patient.

Postman who survived atomic bomb dies at 88

Tanguchi suffered horrific burns that took years to heal

Takashita's body was photographed by Hiroshima Prefectural University researchers as early as November 1945. But it took years to recover Tanguchi's bones, which are now at the University of Tokyo's medical school.

"Even though the atomic bomb was dropped on Nagasaki, I think I survived because I was not in the atomic bomb's path," Tanguchi told the press last week.

"I don't think I would have survived without radiation," he added.

"I'm grateful that I survived," Tanguchi said.

Ancient whales had sharp teeth

Ancient whales had extremely sharp, pointed teeth similar to lions', researchers said Wednesday in a study published in the journal Science.

"The results of our research indicate that ancient whales had sharp teeth," said lead author Dr. John Long from the Australian Museum.

The findings are based on new evidence from ancient whale bones, including one from a species known as Janjucetus.

The scientists found that Janjucetus had sharp teeth similar to lions, which led them to believe that ancient whales may have been predators.

"We've found that ancient whales had sharp teeth, which is a surprising result," said Dr. Long.

"Our findings suggest that ancient whales may have been predators," he said.

"It's a fascinating discovery, and it opens up new questions about the evolution of marine life," said Dr. Long.
