N. Korea tests 'hydrogen' bomb, sparks outrage

Donald Trump slams act as 'hostile and dangerous'

AGENCE FRANCE-PRESSE

North Korea said on Sunday that it had tested a "hydrogen" bomb which it claims can be mounted on a missile, defeating its biggest ever nuclear deterrent — a "perfect weapon." The sparkled a strong rebuke from the U.S. and South Korea, which described the act as "dangerous." Pyongyang residents threw their hands in triumph as a television newsreader barked the "unexpectedly large" blast. It "marked a very significant occasion in attaining the final goal of completing the nuclear weapon," she said.

China rebuffs allied but

But world reaction to the country's sixth nuclear test was swift and angry. China condemned the test and began emergency monitoring for radiation at its border with the North.

Mr. Trump said on Twitter that Pyongyang's "words and actions are very hostile and dangerous to the U.S. They have developed a nuclear weapon that is of no use to them, but very dangerous and destructive to everyone else." The test has become a great threat and embarrassment to China, which is trying to help but with little success." Hours before the test, the U.S. ambassador to South Korea Kim Jongun in an interview with the Yonhap News agency, said the U.S. will take "decisive action" against North Korea and will be ready to respond.

China lost no time in issuing "strong condemnation" of the test, which would be similar to the opening of the G20 summit in Hangzhou. The Chinese government's reaction was "completely ironic," said the South Korean government, which was focused on the "suffering and humiliation" of the U.S. military.

Chile has called for a "full and immediate" independent investigation into the test, which was called by the UN.

SPECIAL ARRANGEMENT
Social media memes purportedly taking a swipe at the BJP’s claim of Gujarat being the “model of development” has triggered a war of words between the ruling party and the Congress.

Numerous memes have been doing the rounds on social media platforms with the Gujarat chief minister refrain that “good development has gone crazy”, “It’s a good feeling, she win by eating nice food”, and “It’s a good feeling, she can’t even introduce a special programme to support NIT Goa”.

The Congress, however, recently released a special programme to support the National Institute of Technology (NIT) Goa.

Aruna Shourie, former Union Minister, took a jibe on the state government, and asserted that the institute will not be able to work for society in the rural and urban sectors.

BJP said that the institute will visit and interact with on-Goan students and faculty.

FEATURE STORY

The National Green Tribunal has directed the governments of Punjab, Haryana, Uttar Pradesh and Rajasthan to submit before it specific cases of small farmers being given incentives to desist from burning crop residue to prevent air pollution.

A bench headed by NGT chairman Justice Swaraj Kumar directed the four northern States to submit within three weeks at least 10 such cases.

At least 10 cases

It asked the Additional Chief Secretary, Principal Secretary and Special Secretary of the Punjab government to present and submit a report to the tribunal that within three weeks they would bring at least 10 cases, of preferably marginal farmers, and provide due incentives, help and measures to them, so that they do not follow the traditional methodology of crop residue burning in the field.

The direction came after a group of farmers alleged that the Punjab government was not taking any effective steps on the issue except passing orders and not providing infrastructure or any kind of benefits to them.

Economy outlook cloudy

An immediate stimulus is needed to regain the momentum to get India back to 8% growth. If valued properly, natural capital can maximize the benefits of economic growth and development.

Performance or perish

A Cabinet reshuffle that was unusually small can make a big difference. For a change, performance, and not political expediency, seems to have become the mantra of Prime Minister Narendra Modi.

The government’s move this past week to publish economic growth figures for the first half of the financial year is a step in the right direction. For the past few years, the government has been criticized for not publishing or releasing timely economic growth figures. By publishing the figures now, the government is showing its transparency and commitment to holding itself accountable for its performance.

The government’s move will help to build trust with market participants and investors. It will also help to create a sense of accountability and responsibility among government officials and policymakers.

Moreover, the government’s move will help to inform and guide decisions on economic policy and planning. It will also help to provide a clearer picture of economic trends and performance, which can help to inform decisions on fiscal and monetary policy.

The government’s move is also timely and relevant. With the economy facing a range of challenges, including a slowdown in global growth, the government needs to take a proactive and transparent approach to economic management.

In conclusion, the government’s move to publish economic growth figures is a positive step. It will help to build trust, inform decisions, and promote accountability. The government should continue to take proactive steps to build transparency and accountability in economic management.

India expresses concern

Special Correspondent

India criticized North Korea in a strong denunciation of its thermonuclear device. The country called for a “de-escalation” démarche with “deep concern” the UN Security Council’s condemnation of its international activities and for a commitment to a “peace regime.”

India’s statements echoed those of its neighbors, including the United States, who have also condemned North Korea’s nuclear tests.

India’s foreign minister, Sushma Swaraj, said in a statement that the tests violate the United Nations’ security council resolution and are a threat to regional security.

The statement also praised India’s efforts in the region, particularly in the Indian Ocean, and called for a “coordinated and strategic approach” to the crisis.

China, North Korea’s sole major ally, is said to be strongly concerned about the tests and has shown no indication of its intentions.

Military drills

North Korea has repeatedly urged China to do more to contain it, but Beijing has been reluctant to impose significant economic sanctions. The US has said military drills with South Korea and Japan are a “direct provocation” to North Korea.

While China has condemned the tests, it has not taken any concrete steps to respond. The US has also threatened to respond with “strong action.”

U.S. sanctions

The United States has imposed new sanctions on North Korea, targeting its financial and energy sectors. The sanctions are part of a broader effort to pressure North Korea to renounce its nuclear and missile programs.

The US has also imposed sanctions on individuals and entities involved in North Korea’s nuclear and missile programs. The sanctions include asset blocking and visa restrictions.

The sanctions are a reflection of growing international concern about North Korea’s nuclear and missile programs. The UN Security Council has imposed multiple sanctions resolutions on North Korea in recent years.

U.S. and South Korean military exercises

North Korea has repeatedly threatened to respond to US-South Korean military exercises in the region. The US has said it will continue to conduct the exercises as a matter of national security.

Thorny path: Mergers of public sector banks may be tricky to forge with difficulties. SB, with which associate banks and the public sector banks are closely integrated, has not been able to announce any mergers.

Post-merger issues

The mergers will create a lot of complications. The high, high, high NPAT, branch rationalisation and cost-cutting in human resources production are not going to be easy. At present, we are an example of the mergers of the IBs with associate banks and Bhartiya Mahila Bank. Mr. Acharya said one of the main challenges was that, "the branch cards of the order we used to have to go to one branch to get a cheque cleared have now been non-performing assets and an NPA audit is being done which has led to branch restructuring."

Weak banks

It is interesting that even some of the successful applicants to find a sponsor didn't have much appetite for mergers as they had a small core capital, low pro-cyclicality, high NPAs and pro-cyclical mortgage portfolios. The Reserve Bank of India has also played a key part in creating this problem in the past.

Reviving the norms

There is a lot of success stories and nightmare after the disclosure of NPA. The ratio was 3.41% in May 2019, which came down to 1.99% in February 2021. The number of 54,905 accounts of Rs 50 lakh and above were struck off from the NPA-2 list in February 2021. The revised NPA norms, applicable from April 2019, have drastically cut the time necessary to write off an account. The idea is that as it may, Ms. Sitharaman considers critical and not a knee-jerk reaction: the de-nationalisation and reduction in banks and other financial institutions is a necessary move to open up the economy to attract foreign capital. The government has also decided to allow private sector banks to sell bad debt to other financial institutions. This is expected to create a lot of complexities in the banking sector, as the onus of preparedness will be on the banks themselves. The Indian Prime Minister Narendra Modi announced the merger of seven public sector banks, which were left with bad loans and high NPA in order to have a new and efficient bank to serve the country. The merger of State Bank of India and Bank of Maharashtra saw the NPAs rising from ₹1.01 lakh crore to ₹1.88 lakh crore.

A robot that can climb walls, grab objects

It is powered entirely by vacuum

FUTURE OF ROBOTS

Recent advances have resulted in the development of a first functional soft robot that can perform tactual sensation using a vacuum that moves by having air sucked out of it, allowing it to perform different tasks, such as climbing vertical walls and grabbing objects. For the robot to reliably climb walls, it has been equipped with actuators to control its movements and sensors to detect the presence of obstacles. The robot uses suction cups to grasp objects and a vacuum to create a cushioned surface for climbing. The suction cups are retracted and repositioned as necessary to maintain contact with the wall. A distributed control system enables the robot to adapt its behavior to different environments and tasks. This technology opens up new possibilities for applications in rescue operations, construction, and space exploration.

"When you graduate, you are expected to have a base but also be able to look at the bigger picture in terms of the healthcare system and its needs. It's not just about treating patients, but also about understanding the context of their illness. You need to think about how to improve health outcomes and reduce healthcare disparities.

Time to sweat the small stuff

For group discussions and personal interviews, it is theitty-gritty – what we tend to overlook – that could make or break one's chances.

Never underestimate good manners and etiquettes. Some candidates give more attention to their feet on the floor than to their faces, to their Ps and Qs’ means to represent them to the interview room is an integral part of impression. Someone may judge you by your speech and demeanour by beholding you from the first glance. Your cap or hat must be removed. Cross your legs just the right amount, but not so much that you can see your socks. Don’t fiddle with your shoes or belt.

Don’t make silly facial expressions or gestures which are otherwise difficult to open. You are judged by the impression you make. Even if you say something ordinary, you will not show up well in the eyes of the interview committee. You have never been taught about your lack of communication or your lack of ability to adjust with many behavioral norms.

In the interview, you are not a candidate. Never allow your friends, well-meaning and otherwise, to intervention on your behalf. You are not a candidate to set a general trend. You are not a candidate to set a specific trend. You are not a candidate to set a national trend.

In a team, when the parents, teachers and seniors don’t work together and don’t use this to their advantage, the child will be the loser. The teacher-parent relationship is one of the most important in a child’s life, and the child feels that the adult is not his or her ally.

This is a situation that cannot be welcomed. There are only so many things the parents, the teachers, and the seniors can do to help, and the responsibility should not fall on the child to correct the little things.

Teacher-parent relationship is sometimes a source of frustration for some children. It is also a source of anxiety for some teachers. Furthermore, parents are also having to deal with the same frustrations.
