Ganesh Visarjan marks the end of the 10-day Ganesh festival and the 125th anniversary celebration of the foundation stone laid by the Pune Municipal Corporation. Nearly 4,300 Ganesh pandals have registered this year, marking a nearly eight-fold increase in the number since 2014.

About 8,000 police personnel and hundreds of trained volunteers will be part of the security detail, which will be overseen by Commissioners of Police, Maharashtra Emergency Management and Security, and the Maharashtra Government Commissioner of Police.

Rum?-detection and dispersible squads along with riot control vehicles and quick response teams will be stationed at various points in the city. Around 1,000 closed-circuit television cameras will keep vigil over the proceedings.

State Health authorities and the Pune Municipal Corporation's Emergency Medical Services will deploy 80 ambulances backed by teams of doctors and volunteers to meet medical exigencies on immersion day in Pune and Mumbai.

Grand procession:
Pune's five Maha Ganesh pandals will be queued up in a steady procession in order of Ganpati, which was established in 1803, will be followed by the ornate Tam-bhulekha Ganpati and the Gauri Tilkal Ganpati and the smaller pandals will be in tow.

Performances by dhol and drums will turn the cityscape into a tableau of culture and musical festivities and ensure the city's Dehu area (old Pune), where the first Ganesh pandal is situated, will be shut down from noon.

Roads in the city's Beravan area will remain closed to traffic from 4 p.m.

Kertheanks under the Licchvi Bridge and the Narayi immersion ghats in Bescan Ghat will be cordoned off to prevent drowning accidents.

A Gratitude Soliloquy from the Heart

GRATITUDE IN WORDS

We have never known how to express our gratitude. We feel fortunate to be able to say, "Thank you." But we have never been able to convey the depth of our appreciation.

In our search, we find the answer in the words of Dr. C. S. Lewis: "The point of a thank-you is not to make the person you thank feel good. The point of a thank-you is to make you feel better."

Dr. Lewis's words resonate deeply with me, and I find myself repeating them whenever I meet someone who has genuinely helped me.

I remember a time when I was struggling with a difficult problem in my life. I sought help from a friend, and that friend was there for me every step of the way. Without that support, I may not have been able to overcome my challenges.

In gratitude, I offer my heartfelt thanks to that friend for their unwavering support and the lessons they taught me. Their kindness and generosity have had a profound impact on my life.

I believe that gratitude is a powerful force that can transform our lives. It allows us to appreciate the good in our lives and to see the positive aspects of even the most difficult situations.

So, let us remember to say thank you to those who have helped us, and let us strive to be grateful for the everyday blessings that fill our lives.

Making up for lost time

In the past half century, India and Myanmar have lost the habit of thinking of themselves as neighbours.

Lamentably, the same cannot be said of China and Pakistan. Both stand on a rocky and inhospitable terrain of land and sea, their borders marked by sharp variations in altitude and temperature. Yet the ties between them have been strengthened over the years, through a series of informal and formal agreements, culminating in the signing of a joint statement in 2015 that marked the beginning of a new era of collaboration.

Pakistan has been a key player in the regional security architecture, playing a crucial role in the mediation of the 1971 Bangladesh Liberation War. It has also been a major player in the Indian Ocean region, providing military and financial assistance to various countries in the region.

China, on the other hand, has been actively involved in the development of the Belt and Road Initiative (BRI), which aims to promote economic cooperation and development in the region. China has been a major investor in various industries in India, including oil and gas, mining, and infrastructure.

India and China have also been involved in a long-running territorial dispute over the region known as the Aksai Chin. This has led to occasional military tensions, and there have been several border incidents in the area.

Despite these challenges, there are signs of renewed cooperation between India and China. In 2018, the two countries signed an agreement to establish a hotline mechanism to address border issues, and in 2019, they held a joint military exercise to improve their understanding of each other's military capabilities.

Nevertheless, the relationship between India and China remains complex and fraught with challenges. Both countries need to make a concerted effort to build trust and understanding, and to work towards a more stable and predictable relationship in the region.

India signals the opening of a new chapter in ties

APPEAL

Ahead of the proposed one-on-one meeting between Prime Minister Narendra Modi and his Chinese counterpart Xi Jinping on Tuesday, India has formally opened a new chapter in ties with the world's second-largest economy and promised to elevate them to "a new high".

Long-term solution

But ahead of the summit, a high-powered delegation of India led by national security advisor Ajit Doval and his team will try to find a long-term solution to prevent incidents and reduce tension in the Doklam plateau.

Diplomatic efforts

Before the summit, a high-level visit by China's President Xi Jinping and Prime Minister Narendra Modi in April was unceremonious. In a bid to avoid a "face-off", the meeting was held over a video conference.

Prime Minister Narendra Modi on Monday strongly pitched for the setting up of a BRICS credit rating agency to counter western rating institutions and cater to the financial needs of sovereign and corporate entities of developing nations.

In an address at the plenary session of the BRICS Summit here, Mr. Modi said a separate rating agency would help the economies of the member countries and others.

Our Central Banks must further strengthen their capabilities and promote cooperation between the Contingent Reserve Arrangement and the IMF (International Monetary Fund), Mr. Prime Minister said, urging early creation of this mechanism. Jaguar Land Rover (JLR) will provide a glimpse of its vision of the future of the luxury car sector later this week in London at its annual press day as it unveils a new connected steering wheel that could be used as part of a co-driving solution.

“The connected steering wheel could be the only part of the car you own,” said IJLR. Ahead of the unveiling at its first-ever Tech Fair due to take place in central London, in which it will present some of the latest technology options it is exploring and developing, IJLR has previewed a new concept described as an “intelligent” steering wheel for the UK market.

The wheel could be used as a virtual personal assistant, planning a journey and providing information about the vehicle’s service history and where to reach when it needs it, suggested the company on Monday.

The wheel was a vehicle of virtual personal assistant, planning a journey and providing information about the vehicle’s service history and where to reach when it needs it, suggested the company.

It has also announced another concept, announcing earlier this year that it would be investing $25 million into the UK site sharing company, JLR, to which it will supply a fleet of autonomous vehicles.

In June, the company showed a Range Rover Sport with prototype technology capable of operating autonomously through a city, in what is described as a move towards “level four” autonomy – vehicles capable of driving in specific environments without intervention.

‘On demand service’

Imagine a future of autonomous, connected and electric cars where you don’t own a single car, but instead call upon the vehicle of your choice, from where and when you need it,” suggested IJLR.

In the continued presence of the BCCI in the cricketing world, the administrative structure has always been the topic of discussion. Whether it be the committee of administrators or the chief selector, the BCCI has been involved in numerous controversies.

The BCCI is not just a cricketing body; it is a business conglomerate with various sports being its stakeholders. The BCCI holds the rights to the Indian cricket team, and its operations are crucial to the success of cricket in India.

Will Star Bid for India rights next year?

Star India, which owns the BCCI’s global media rights, will enter the fray in 2016 to bag the rights for India’s international matches at home.

The BCCI was not interested in broadcasting cricket on its own and has looked for partnerships with international broadcasting companies.

The BCCI has a significant presence in the television broadcasting rights market. It has partnered with Star India to broadcast the Indian cricket team’s matches.

The BCCI is looking for a new partner to replace the existing deal with Star India. The new partner will need to be prepared to pay a high price for the rights.

The BCCI has already started negotiations with potential partners and is expected to announce the new deal in the coming months.

The BCCI’s decision to look for a new partner is based on the belief that the current deal is not fulfilling the requirements of the organization.

The BCCI is looking for a partner who can provide better exposure to the Indian cricket team and increase the revenue from broadcasting rights.

The BCCI is also considering the possibility of selling the rights to a single entity, which would allow them to focus on the overall performance of the team.

In conclusion, the BCCI is looking for a new partner to replace Star India for the 2016 International matches. The new partner will need to be prepared to pay a high price for the rights and provide better exposure to the Indian cricket team.

More importantly, it is crucial for the BCCI to ensure that the Indian cricket team is well-prepared and competitive in the international stage.

The decision has affected 5 players

FooD India's Rohan Bopanna has criticized the US Open organizers for their handling of the case involving Fabio Foginni, who was, on Saturday, withdrawn from the tournament for missing a woman umpire during his first round match.
