CHENNAI-Having held assembly elections, the Tamil Nadu government has announced a minimum support price (MSP) for rice and wheat.

In a move that is likely to benefit farmers, the Tamil Nadu government has announced a minimum support price (MSP) for rice and wheat.

Local MSPs for rice and wheat have been set at ₹2,050 and ₹2,000 per quintal respectively. The prices are applicable for the current season, which ends on June 30. The state government has also announced a loan waiver for farmers who have paid off their loans.

Minister for Agriculture and Rural Development K.C. Veeramani said that the decision was taken to address the needs of farmers, who have been hit by the drought in recent years.

The announcement is expected to provide relief to farmers, who have been facing difficulties in selling their produce at fair prices.

Minister for Finance and Revenue V. Ramasamy said that the MSPs would be implemented from July 1, and the state government would ensure that farmers receive the full amount of MSP at their doorstep.

The decision to announce MSPs is in line with the Centre’s move to provide a safety net for farmers and ensure their income.

Poor prices, plummeting sales worry potato growers

‘With new season crop, loss may only aggravate’

With the fresh sowing season set to kick off in little over a month, potato growers in Punjab are a worried lot as a bulk of the old crop is still lying in cold storages. Potato growers, who have constantly staged protests against successive governments, rue the fact that they are still facing the ill-effects of the Centre’s demonetisation move last year, as the number of buyers of potato seeds has dropped drastically.

Cash crunch

While we had appreciated demonstration, unfortunately we are still facing unprecedented consequences. There are hardly any buyers for our crop, sans demonetisation, traders are facing cash crunch, resulting in drop of bulk orders from big markets like Delhi and other major cities,” Jaspinder Kaur, general secretary, Jalandhar Potato Growers Association, told The Hindu.

He said that potato growers have kept the stock available in cold storage since the last crop season in anticipation of selling the produce at a better price later.

“But now there are fewer buyers and poor prices. This is because the buyers are asking us to sell at lower prices,” he added.

Facing hardships due to demonetisation, the potato seed growers from Punjab have demanded an immediate freight subsidy so that the growers can transport their crop to other States and across the country in international and national markets.

“Also, the growers have urged the State government to make crop loans of potato growers besides asking the State agencies to intervene and generate markets at the national and international level,” Jaspinder Kaur said.

Punjab produces quality potato seed, which is distributed across the country including West Bengal, across the remaining parts of the North and Odisha. Potato seed is usually supplied from last week of October to mid-December every year.
Forest dept stops illegal cutting of trees

The cutters claimed it was being done to set up a park under the AMRUT Yojana as no permission had been taken. “No mature tree can be cut or pruned in any area without permission of the Forest Department,” the DFO added.

Mr. Moharana said the matter came up the same with the Berhampur Municipal Corporation. “If a park is being established, these trees which provide shelter to a large number of birds, should be part of it rather than being cut. Also, the trees were a distance of over 15 feet from the road, so there was no need to cut them,” he said.

After the Phailin cyclone, very few old trees had survived in the city. A large number of saplings had been planted by the roadside throughout Berhampur.

Towards war’s end in Syria

The battlefield is criss-crossing with competing interests in the charge against the Islamic State (IS).

News comes daily of the Syrian struggle. But after another round towards the besieged eastern province of Deir ez-Zor during the summer of 2014, the Islamic State (IS) – so that body, has seemingly started in its attack. An official of the Western Correspondent, Pacifica, has noted that if the siege continued, there would be no hope for the IS to breach the city and push through the Ash-Shula crossroad to the Homs region. The IS was attempting to build a wall across the city and relieve the desperate city. Consequently, the IS began to position itself in the eastern city and to launch attacks on the forces of the Syrian Army.

Subnationalism is not a threat

As long as it is not secessionist, or aimed at altering sections, subnationalism can be seen as a necessary component. Materialism is not a threat.

during the first quarter of 2014.

And with the losing of civilians, the IS has not been able to maintain the interests of the Syrian population. The IS is not able to maintain the interests of the Syrian population. The IS is not able to maintain the interests of the Syrian population.

İstanbul, Turkey (May 18th, 2023) – More than a decade after the start of the Syrian conflict, the Islamic State (IS) is facing a renewed push from the Syrian government and its allies. The forces of the Syrian government, led by President Bashar al-Assad, have been ramping up their efforts to retake territory from the IS. The latest push has seen the Syrian government forces launching an offensive in the eastern parts of the city of Deir ez-Zor, a key strategic position that has been under IS control for more than a year.

With the Syrian government forces advancing, the IS has been forced to withdraw from some of its positions in the city. The retreat of the IS has been met with rejoicing by many in the region, who see it as a step towards stabilizing the area and reducing the threat of IS attacks.

However, the situation remains volatile, and there are concerns that the IS could stage a counter-attack. The Syrian government forces have been facing some challenges in their efforts to retake territory, and there are reports of heavy fighting in some areas.

Despite these challenges, the Syrian government forces appear to be making progress in their efforts to retake Deir ez-Zor. The capture of the city would be a major blow to the IS and would be a significant step towards reducing the threat of the group in the region.

The capture of Deir ez-Zor would also be a major gain for the Syrian government, which has been working to rebuild the country after more than a decade of war. The government has been facing a range of challenges, including the ongoing conflict with the IS and the need to address the needs of millions of displaced people.

The capture of Deir ez-Zor would also have implications for the international community, which has been working to address the conflict in Syria. The capture of the city would be a significant step towards reducing the threat of the IS and would be a sign that the international community’s efforts to address the conflict are starting to pay off.

The capture of Deir ez-Zor would also be a sign that the Syrian government is starting to regain control of the country. BPCL eyes GAIL, Oil India for merger

State-owned company's ambition is to figure among top-25 global energy firms, says chairman

S DINESH

Bihar Petroleum Corporation Limited (BPCL), India's second largest state-owned oil refiner is mulling a merger with GAIL, India's largest gas distributor, and Oil India, the country's second largest explorer, to create an integrated energy major.

In a stock exchange filing, BPCL said it has written to the petroleum ministry about its ambitions plan and is waiting to hear back from the government.

Global ambition

Confirming the development, BPCL Chairman D. Ramprasad Bajpai said, "BPCL has a lot of options being evaluated but it’s very difficult for us to share with you as it needs to be approved by the government as we are going to buy the stakes from the government."

Finance Minister Arun Jaitley also hinted at the talks on the merger of state-owned firms and oil and gas majors when he spoke at the 2017 budget speech when he spoke about the government's intent to create integrated public sector 'oil majors' to match the performance of global oil giants and domestic private sector firms.

"GAIL, India and Oil India are there on the radar", Mr. Rajanman said, when asked about the companies BPCL was looking to merge with. BPCL had presented the proposal for a merger of state-owned Indian Oil Corporation Limited (IOC) with GAIL, which got Mahatma Gandhi ratナー status on Tuesday, to the petroleum ministry about its ambitious plan which also is a part of the government's nefarious plan to make BPCL a mega-cap player in the oil sector.

Petroleum plans

BPCL plans to invest 50 billion rupees over the next five years, of which 40 billion is aimed at investments in petrochemicals, the Finance Ministry said.

"We feel confident we will go ahead with the merger with GAIL and will be able to bring down our debt," BPCL Chairman Mr. D. Ramprasad Bajpai said.

The government has been keen on digitizing payments for a sustained growth of such transactions, and it is essential for the elimination of such practices, BPCL Chairman Mr. D. Ramprasad Bajpai said.

Google Updates Translate App to Break Language Barrier

Google has updated its Translate app with several new features that enable users to bring down language barriers instantly. The app now supports visual translation among languages, allowing users to instantly translate images and text from one language to another. The company plans to release this feature to the public in the next few months.

The new feature will be available on both iOS and Android platforms, providing users with a powerful tool to communicate with people from different parts of the world. According to Google, the new feature will be rolled out in select countries first, before being introduced globally.

The company has also introduced a new feature that allows users to translate text in real-time, even when they are not connected to the internet. This feature will be particularly useful for users who need to communicate with people in areas with limited internet connectivity.

The new features are part of Google's ongoing efforts to make its technology more accessible to people around the world. The company has been working on several initiatives to provide access to the internet, including its ongoing Project loon program, which uses balloons to provide internet service to remote areas.

The new features are expected to help Google compete with other language translation services, such as Microsoft's Translator and Apple's Live Translate. The company has been working on improving its language translation technology for several years, and the new features represent a significant step forward in this area.

McGill shrugs off Hugill threat
Pistol Allen outguns Zhuang, Higgins beats Zhao

Defending champion Anthony McGill made short work of Ashley Hugill with a 3-0 (30-0, 15-0, 15-0, 15-0) victory in the first round of the Commercial Bank Championships of Champions last night.

Though the start was not impressive, McGill rebounded in the second frame. In the third, Hugill had a break of 64 but had the misfortune of seeing his yellow pot in the hole when he was going for his safety play failing 64-44. McGill responded in style and wrapped up the frame.

Earlier, Mark Allen lived up to his nickname of ‘Pistol’ by beating Sri Lanka’s Dinith Perera 3-0 (30-0, 15-0, 15-0) in the day’s last match. John Higgins overcame a spirited challenge from Zhao Xintong in the 6-0 (15-0, 15-0, 15-0, 15-0, 15-0, 15-0) victory.

In the second round, Anthony McGill (WAL) and Stephen McGuire (Sco) will face the last-eight line-up of World champion Ronnie O’Sullivan and tournament veteran Stephen Hendry.

Hugill, who is enjoying life with his family in France, admitted that he had a difficult time against the world No. 1 and said that he was happy to be in the last eight.

Hendry, who is out of the World Championship in the UK, but hopes to be there for every tournament, said that he is happy to go on the record of some of the greats of the sport.

‘The competition is so intense that you have to fight every match. No one has a God-given right to win. Just because you are strong, it doesn’t mean you have a right to win. You have to earn the title yourself,’ he added.

Anthony Hemion won a ranking tournament after being on the circuit for 26 long years. He lived a quiet life away from the limelight, not even a mention on the list of World champions. His dream came true when he was able to win the title after all these years.

Hemion said that Indians are essentially touch-fothers in the green baize, unlike the other countries where they play the power game.
